00:35:18 Simon Marginson: Colleagues - please give thought to your questions for the Q&A part of the webinar!

00:50:19 Aasia Chaudhry: Hi Ly thank you for sharing your research with us. Could you please tell whether your research was a general research in terms of students centre approach (of teaching) and their experiences or was it conducted in a particular context in the context of a particular discipline? Thank you.

00:54:33 Simon Marginson: Questions please everyone! Now is the time to come forward

00:57:04 Khoa Le: Dear Ms. Ly and Mr. Nghia, I really impressed by your findings, especially the one about student's employability and internationalization. However based on my observation, in the event that international working standards are not match with the local (Vietnamese) one, many students like us find it difficult to adapt when applying and working locally. So do you think that besides internationalization, should student's be provided with insights from the local labor market as well?

00:58:24 Thuy Tran: Hi chi Ly, thank you so much for sharing your research. Could you please also share some of the barriers in applying student-centred teaching at institutional level in terms of "providing flexibility for students' learning"? Thank you

01:02:23 Lê Nguyễn Hoàng Giang: Thank you, Prof. Ly Tran & Dr. Nghia Tran, for this wonderful research. I understand that this is a quantitative study; however, I think that it could be furthered through the qualitative lens, and from qualitative perspective, we would be able to learn more from students' narratives. Also, I am interested in the internship part as it has been situated in Vietnamese higher education contexts. So, what are institutional supports for students to earn their internship positions? From my experience, students have to apply for internship positions by themselves and they are unpaid jobs. This is so different from Canadian higher education contexts, where I am located. We have co-op programs to support students with their internship. This is what we call experiential learning. I would love to hear your thoughts about this! thank you :)

01:07:17 Thuy Tran: Hi anh Nghia, thank you so much for your wonderful presentation and research. I am wondering about the contribution of informal learning to students' learning skills seemed to be the lowest. Why was it the case, and could please share some of your suggestions to improve this area because to me learning skills are the weakness of students in Vietnam in general. Thanks

01:07:41 Binh Bui: Thank you Drs. Ly Tran and Nghia Tran. Such a great presentation to inform our perspectives on Vietnamese higher ed!
