

Stratified Space: Compromises and Commitments in University Estates, 25 May 2021

00:38:40 Simon Marginson: time to start thinking about what you would like to ask Zac - or simply what you would like to tell us about buildings, grounds, facilities, 'estates'.

00:39:14 Simon Marginson: An English Vice-Chancellor's Block B is her/his castle, they say

00:39:43 Victorița Trif: What is the impact of Covid-19 crisis on academic profession in your opinion?

00:45:11 Lee Rensimer: Could you talk about the for-profit component of privately owned estates and how that plays out in contemporary management decisions to expand or contract university space? How do you theorise this encroaching outsourcing? Is this a form of unbundling of HE (i.e. an internal problem) or more a phenomenon across sectors?

00:46:47 Vincent Carpentier: Are the themes and debates related to HE Estates differ across countries? And why?

00:47:12 Lauren Clark: In light of McCrone's work on formal/informal/intermediate spaces, what do you think we can learn from COVID 19 and campus closures about the importance of providing physical spaces for interaction (that might be outside the classroom)?

00:49:17 Soyoung Lee: Thank you for your presentation Zachery! I'm wondering how researching university estates is different from researching other forms of estates? How is the distinctive educational value of higher education addressed in researching the physical space? And what are your assumptions about students' needs that university physical space should meet?

01:07:04 Lauren Clark: Thank you, Zach!

01:13:53 Eliel Cohen: I really enjoyed this Zachery, thanks! I look forward to keeping up the discussion with Luke and yourself. Certainly the research I'm involved with on student's sense of belonging agrees with your point about the importance of physical space in students' experience, wellbeing, and construction of student communities.

01:17:49 Tom Martin: Thanks so much Zach. Very interesting and really insightful.
