00:23:41 Rebecca Schendel: The Briefs are open access. You can access the full publication at: <https://www.acenet.edu/Research-Insights/Pages/Internationalization/International-Briefs-for-Higher-Education-Leaders.aspx>

00:29:12 mutia Alnimrat: hi

00:29:27 mutia Alnimrat: from Jordan

00:48:20 Kunwar Jee Sinha: Are we going to get the Certificate of Participation of this webinar?

00:48:28 Robin Helms: ACE is grateful to Dr. Gray for being a leader in our women's leadership and diversity research - for more from her on the topics she's addressing now, check out one of her blog posts: <https://www.higheredtoday.org/2019/10/21/5-percent-action-steps-institutions-investing-women-color/>

00:50:05 glen chatelier: In the context of change management in education during the Covid 19 Pandemic, do you see this as an opportunity towards equity balance in genders in HEI?

00:52:09 Brittani Nelson: This presentation is extremely helpful and insightful for me as I pivot from the public health sector to higher education and conducting research. Thank you Dr. Gray for those action items! Hopefully institutions are able to implement those items.

00:55:53 Kunwar Jee Sinha: Are we going to get the Certificate of Participation of this webinar?

00:58:19 Andreá Williams: Comment: Thank you for adding your perspectives on WCUs. All that you mention resonates with me as a women's college graduate in the US (Spelman College in Georgia). There was definitely an emphasis on leadership and on pursuing graduate school and academic life. I'd also add, as Ashley gestures, that Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs) in the US are pipelines into faculty for women of color.

01:01:39 philip altbach: Are Any of the countries or institutions on the panel actually doing specific things to increase representation of women and especially marginalized women

01:01:57 Soyoung Lee: I'm curious about the role of male academics in this kind of conversation. When I attend seminars related to gender equality and women in higher education, speakers and the audience tend to be female-dominant. Do you think if this conversation to go beyond just between us and to have more impact, should male be involved more? I understand it would be less normal for male speakers talk about women issues, but in what ways can this conversation involve male academics as well?

01:05:53 John Fowler: Sorry I am in a shared space at the moment and not able to turn on video to speak. Building on the idea of the pandemic bringing possible benefits.

What impacts do you see the still increasing role of technology-mediated communications playing both positively and negatively in the post COVID-19 higher education leadership landscape.

01:07:42 Mariko Gakiya: Thank you for a helpful presentation. What do you see trends or emerging areas of disciplinary backgrounds/ expertise/skills are required or appreciated for those leaders given more interdisciplinary programs created in higher education (e.g. SDG/ESG). MIT just appointed Dr. Nobles (Political scientist) as a new chancellor.

01:07:50 Rebecca Schendel: Phil, you raise an important question, of course. We have focused both of the webinars more on the challenges highlighted with the Brief, as opposed to some of the policy solutions (national and institutional) advanced in some of the contexts represented. The panel here today isn't particularly geographically diverse, but there is an interesting range of policy solutions presented within the Brief itself.

01:08:31 Andreá Williams: At Ohio State in the US, we have an initiative called Advocates & Allies that encourages men to promote gender equity and sponsor women towards leadership: <https://womensplace.osu.edu/initiatives-and-programs/advocates-allies>

01:09:18 glen chatelier: Much thanks for this rich forum and some very erudite and profound perspectives. Extremely useful!!!

01:15:26 Kara Godwin she/her: @Phil, to your question, see Terhi Nokkala's piece in the ACE-CIHE brief. You raise a great question - one we wrestled/are wrestling with in pulling this together. <https://www.acenet.edu/Research-Insights/Pages/Internationalization/International-Briefs-for-Higher-Education-Leaders.aspx>

01:15:56 Kara Godwin she/her: @Phil, your question also speaks to our ongoing challenge with a dearth of data and global research in this area.
